The Crisis of Belief
Hebrews 11:1-19

We hear the word crisis being thrown around a lot in the news right now, don't we?

Throughout the past two years as we've moved toward the presidential election, we've heard about a health-care crisis, an environmental crisis, and an oil crisis. Over the past several weeks, we've experienced a massive financial crisis involving failing banks and investment firms, leading to huge drops in the stock market. And we all have our own personal crises from time to time.

Now sometimes the word crisis is overused or misused. Sometimes the crisis is real. Sometimes it's manufactured.

The word crisis comes from a Greek word that has to do with making a judgment or decision. It's a turning point, a point when we have to choose one way or another, take one course or another. It's when things can go either way.

Well, in the midst of all the crises our nation is facing today, I want to talk to you about an even more important crisis—what Henry Blackaby calls “the crisis of belief.”

What do I mean by that? I'm talking about those points in our walk with God when He has made His will and His promises clear to us, and we must decide what we believe about God and whether we'll take Him at His word and move in the direction He is leading us. It's not a one-time experience; it's something that happens again and again as God works in our lives and in our life together as His people.

Over the past couple of months now, we've been working our way through the themes of Henry Blackaby's study Experiencing God: Knowing and Doing the Will of God.¹ Blackaby lays out what he calls Seven Realities of Experiencing God. So far we've looked at the first four:

- God is always at work around you.
- God pursues a continuing love relationship with you that is real and personal.
- God invites you to become involved with Him in His work.
- God speaks by the Holy Spirit through the Bible, prayer, circumstances, and the church to reveal Himself, His purposes, and His ways.

The fifth reality describes what we're talking about this morning this way: God's invitation to work with Him always leads us to a crisis of belief that requires faith and action.

¹ In this sermon series, I am relying heavily on Blackaby's ideas as presented in Henry T. Blackaby and Claude V. King, Experiencing God: How to Live the Full Adventure of Knowing and Doing the Will of God (Nashville: Broadman & Holman, 1994).

What is faith?

In our text, Hebrews 11:1-19, the writer defined genuine faith and illustrated it with the lives of ancient believers. Listen to how he did this. READ TEXT . . .

This text gives us the classic definition of faith with two parallel statements. “Now faith is being sure of what we hope for”² or as the KJV puts it “the substance of things hoped for.” In other words, faith is being as sure of what we hope for as if it were actually in our hands! It’s being “certain of what we do not see.” The parallelism makes essentially the same point. The confidence we have is proof of what we can’t yet see.

Then the writer goes on to point to the ancients as examples of this kind of faith (11:4-19).

“By faith Abel offered a better sacrifice than Cain did.”

“By faith Enoch was taken from this life so that he did not experience death.”

By faith Noah built the ark to save his family from the flood, “condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness that comes by faith.”

By faith Abraham obeyed God when he called him to go to a place he would later inherit, even though he didn’t know where it was he was going. Like Isaac and Jacob after him, “he made his home in the promised land like a stranger in a foreign country,” living in tents. But it wasn’t for naught; “he was looking forward to that city with foundations, whose architect and builder is God.”

It was by faith that Abraham and Sarah were able to have Isaac, even though Abraham was old and Sarah was barren and well past the child-bearing years.

All these people, the writer tells us, were still living by faith when they died. They were sure of what they hoped for, even though they didn’t yet receive what was promised. They saw these things from a distance and welcomed them. Even though they didn’t see what was promised up close, they were certain of it. They lived and died in faith. “They admitted that they were aliens and strangers on the earth,” pilgrims looking and longing for that heavenly homeland. And God is not ashamed to be called their God. He won’t disappoint them, because he has prepared a city for them!

It was by faith that Abraham was willing to offer his son Isaac to God as a sacrifice. Abraham really believed that if he obeyed God and went through with sacrificing Isaac, God would raise Isaac from the dead in order to keep His promise that He would fulfill His covenant through Isaac.

In the midst of this roll call, the writer focuses his point of emphasis in v. 6: “And without faith, it is impossible to please God, because anyone who comes to him must believe that he exists and that he rewards those who earnestly seek him.”

The writer tells us about many more people of faith, and for some of them, things didn’t turn out so well humanly speaking. But these suffice for now.

The lives of these ancients illustrated well what the writer was saying—that real faith is being sure and certain of God’s promises, even though we can’t hold them in our hands or see them like we can a checkbook or a stock report or a plate of food or a key to our house. Faith is taking God at His word, no matter what things look like from our human perspective, no matter what the world is saying to us about the situation!

Do we believe God?

Now that’s a very important truth for us to grasp, especially when it comes to participating with God in what He’s doing. Why? Because God’s invitation to work with Him always leads us to a crisis of belief that requires faith and action. It brings us to the point that we have to decide whether we'll take God at His word that He will do what He says, especially when it's something we know we can't do on our own.

There are four things about this crisis of belief that we can learn from this text . . .

First, an encounter with God requires faith. If we're going to respond to God, the only way to do it is in faith. We must take Him at His word.

As we do, we may not understand how He has done or will do things, but we will understand that He has or will! Isn't that what the writer is talking about in v. 3 when he says that it's by faith that "we understand that the universe was formed at God's command"? We don't understand everything about how it was formed, but we do understand that it was God who made it!

Hebrews is right! Without faith, it's impossible to please God! How can we come to Him if we don't believe He exists and that He rewards those who diligently seek Him?

Now sometimes my faith is small. I have to confess that it would be a stretch for me to do what Henry Blackaby led his church in Saskatoon, Saskatchewan to do,³ especially in these days when there's so much uncertainty about the economy.

He says that the finance committee said to him one year, "Pastor, you have taught us to walk by faith in every area of the life of our church except in the budget." The committee proposed that the church should determine what God wanted to do through them that year and estimate what that would cost. Then they would divide the budget three ways—what they planned to do through tithes, what others had promised to do, and what they would have to depend on God to do.

The church prayed about it and decided that was how God wanted them to approach their budget. Blackaby says that by the way they had previously done things, their normal budget that year would have been about $74,000. But using this process, that year's budget was set at $164,000.

The congregation committed to pray daily that God would meet their needs. Anytime they received any unanticipated gifts, they credited the amount to God's column. At the end of the year, they had received $172,000!

Their crisis of belief was whether they would operate on what they knew they could do, or on what they would trust God to do. It was an encounter with God that required faith.

The second thing we learn here about the crisis of belief is that encounters with God are God-sized.

The text is obvious! Enoch left this life without experiencing death; only God could do that!

God directed Noah to build the ark, and preserved him and his family through a flood that destroyed the world; only God could do that! Only God could have given Isaac to Abraham and Sarah, and only God could be counted on to give him back if Abraham offered him to Him!

When God calls us to become involved in something He's doing, in some way it will have God-sized dimensions to it. It will involve something we have to trust Him for, something we can't do on our own, something He will have to do through us! And as He works through us, the world will see His activity, and people will come to know Him.

If you want to hear about God-sized encounters, talk to Richard Brunson of NC Baptist Men about disaster relief and the doors that this ministry has opened for the gospel.

³ Blackaby and King, 134-135.

But we've seen it too—just a few weeks ago, when more than 60 people from our church went to our local National Guard Armory to demonstrate our care and concern for these citizen-soldiers who will deploy on December 2 to prepare to go to Iraq in a few months. One person told us, “When I heard y'all were going to do a hot dog supper, I thought it would be three little old ladies serving hot dogs. This is amazing!” The sergeants have told us two or three times that these men were deeply touched. Friendships started that night that may blossom into opportunities to share the gospel in deeper ways with some of these men who don't know the Lord at a time when they will be very open.

Friends, God did that! When He laid that on our Outreach Committee's hearts, this year's budget item for outreach was pretty much depleted. But the committee decided to trust God to provide for it, and He did! In fact, we left two tables full of deserts for them for the weekend! And who knows how, while those men are serving in Iraq, they'll be comforted by the bandanas we gave them with Psalm 91 printed on them or by the little wooden cross they can carry in their pocket or by the little card with John 3:16 printed on it—who knows how God will use that evening and the follow-up that will take place?

God calls us to God-sized encounters—thing He does through us that only He can do!

Now here's a third thing—what we do in response to God's revelation reveals what we believe about God.

The ancients' responses showed they believed what God said. The most powerful example was Abraham's willingness to offer Isaac to God as a sacrifice. When we really believe God, we'll do what He calls us to do. We might move forward in fear and trepidation, asking God to help our unbelief, but if we really believe, we'll obey. Our faith will be borne out by our works.

You've probably heard that story that I heard a long time ago about the man rolling a wheelbarrow across Niagara Falls on a tight-rope. People were amazed and applauding. Then he asked, “How many of you believe I can roll a man across the Falls in this wheelbarrow?” Many of them said, “Oh, yes!” Then he said, “Who will let me do it?” And nobody would.

Is that how we are when God shows us what He wants to do in us and through us, when He wants to do God-sized things? “I believe you can, Lord, but . . .” Aren't we really saying either, “Lord, I'm not sure You can,” or else, “Lord, I know You can, I just don't want You to!”

One more thing about this crisis of belief: True faith requires action. The ancients acted on their faith. And like them, if we really believe God, we'll trust ourselves to Him, take Him at His word, and obey, whatever He calls us to do!

Paul talked about “faith working through love” (Galatians 5:6, ESV), and James declared that he would show his faith by his actions (James 2:18). It's the same with us. If we really believe God, we'll act accordingly.

God's invitation to work with Him always leads us to a crisis of belief that requires faith and action.

Understand that our believing God and acting on that belief won't always assure “success” as we usually think of it—everything falling into place and going right according to our view. The last part of Hebrews 11 tells about others who were tortured, flogged, jailed, stoned, destitute, persecuted, and mistreated; but they were commended for their faith!

About eight years ago, a teenager in western NC named Josie had been sick with a mysterious acute fatigue syndrome. She was on a feeding tube for some time, and had to have surgery to implant steel rods on either side of her spine because it had become so limp. Before that surgery, her pastor told her, “Josie, we’ve prayed for you over and over, and I don’t know why God hasn’t chosen to heal you.”

She replied, “When God is done teaching me everything He wants me to learn through this experience, and everything He wants to teach others around me, He will heal me.”⁴

Brothers and sisters, that’s what real faith is all about.

And when we truly believe God, we will follow His will and do what He calls us to do regardless.

⁴ I heard Josie’s pastor share her story as a prayer request in a meeting in September 2000.
